

TWENTY YEARS A DEMOCRAT.

A curious book is "The Poor Man in Politics," by R. D. Flynn. It would be highly interesting and instructive to many more people than will ever read it. It is not in the highest sense an artistic or literary production, but it blunts out a great many facts which the voters of this country might well take to heart. The writer explains himself to some extent in such phrases as these:

"Having given the best years of my life and liberty of my limited means to further party interests, I feel that I have a right to speak in meetings, and to do it. Now, Old Blackhead, you can call me a sorehead, deadhead, or any other kind of a head, except a large-headed, or a go-ahead in politics, and try to say for myself, I am going to wind up. I repeat, no more drilling or driving me with the party lash, the thong to which is the cry, 'Nigger, nigger, nigger.' No more work for me on the mainland. I am afraid of inferior machines anyway. And, above all, no more politics for me of the foot-dlicking, catsway variety."

This writer has been a Democrat for twenty years, and proceeds to consider the length of time his party has had full control, which he declares "sufficient, at least, for the leaders to have agreed upon some one line of Governmental policy, so essential in the present critical condition of our country to relieve the impoverished and destitute states of commerce and the people." A few of the things he proposes are thus stated:

"I shall try to show the arrogance of its great leader, and his stubborn refusal to treat with or consider the wishes of the smaller men to the best mode of procedure in running the ship of state. I shall try to show the poor man in politics how he has been abused, not only by men high in the party, but by those lower down, who shall try to show why to-day there is not a united Democracy in any State, county, city or town in the United States. Finally, I shall try to show the poor men of the country that a tendency to free trade is to their interest, and that continuation of protection is their only salvation."

The practical common-sense of the writer shines out now, and then so strong that one wonders how he contrived to continue "for twenty years a Democrat." This one picture is a fair sample:

"Let me lay aside my prejudices for a moment and calmly consider the history of the country for the last twenty years. At the closing scenes of the war what do we find? The powerful, conquered Confederate States, which had performed in the great war prodigies of courage and valour as a nation, and in whose borders lived millions of ignorant and penniless slaves, who were ignorant and penniless. And over these conquered Southerners stood the grand and victorious army of the Republic, with the great North and West to back it."

Prisons and camps, and in many instances, the social fabric of our Government were dethroned. The rehabilitated Union, with the conquered Confederates, impeded every way from Central Park DUDLEY BUCK, Pres.; Albert Ross Parsons, Vice-Pres.; H. W. Greene, Secy. and Treas.
